SOME STAGING SUGGESTIONS

“Theme from New York, New York” is a song that sings itself. Therefore, there’s no need for a great deal of glitzy motion that will only obscure the tune. This song is written in a traditional Broadway style; that is, it starts simply, builds in the middle and slows down to a key change and cakewalk (kickline) finale. Let any motion you use reflect this form -simpler at the beginning, more exuberant and bigger at the end.

You can stage this song in an infinite variety of ways, but three possibilities come to mind. One is a more traditional “top hat and cane” approach with all the same kind of business you would expect from this production number par excellence. Another is to play the piece according to the character who is singing it - a boy or girl leaving their small town to be a part of the big city. Using small town dress could be effective here. Finally, you could also capture the essence of New York itself, dressing performers as any or all people you would expect to see there . . . rich people, bag men, punk rockers, cab drivers, whatever. New York is a place of constant and endless variety that you could use to your advantage in staging.

Whatever course you choose (and there are so many more than the ones listed here), let your staging compliment this “modern classic” of a showstopper. The song will do most of the work for you if you simply let it.
